ABSTRACT

A method of processing a substrate, where the substrate is transferred from an ambient environment into a clean environment. The substrate is heated to at least a first temperature within the clean environment, and then maintained at no less than the first temperature within the clean environment. The substrate is selectively transferred within the clean environment to more than one processing chambers, and processed in the more than one processing chambers. The substrate is transferred from the clean environment into the ambient environment.

56320.pap.doc